Abstract

Apparatus and methods for attacking a screening algorithm. Content to be downloaded is identified. The identified content is then partitioned into at least two sections, wherein each of the at least two sections has a duration which is less than a duration of a threshold duration value assigned by the screening algorithm, and the partitioned content is subjected to a screening algorithm. Once the content has been successfully downloaded, the integrity of the downloaded content may be restored by reassembling the sections.